I'll sing you a ditty of No-where town,
You climb the hill when the sun goes down,
Step out on the roadway of golden light,
And No-where town lies along to your right.
In No-where town is a Silver Rose,
A magic blossom that swings and grows,
So high that never a man or maid,
Has pluck'd that flow'r from it's fairy glade.

The rose is water'd by all the tears,
That lovers weep through the countless years,
And warm'd by the breath of sighs,
And lit by the light in lover's eyes;
And none may reach it to pluck save he,
Whose love shall last through eternity,
So some sweet evening we'll go, we two,
And I will gather the rose for you.
